Death of Mr. Charles Martin, of Ballarat, removes an early colonist, who, as one of the first school masters, left an impress on its early history. He left London in 1852, and shortly after his arrival was employed as a reporter on the Geelong press. He afterwards opened a school at Point Nepean, from whence he removed to Pascoe Vale, and thence to Ballarat, opening the first national school there on the 2nd February, 1857, in the building now known as the continuation school and State school No. 33, where he taught for nineteen years. Some of our present day politicians and many prominent citizens received their early education at his hands. In 1876 he was promoted to the training institute, Melbourne, where he had charge of the teachers' training class. He subsequently had charge of the Port Fairy and later on the Casterton State schools. In 1886 he retired from the service and took a trip to the old country, and on his return went to Ballarat, where he resided to the time of his death, on the 29th inst. in his 80th year.

In all the classes above the Sixth to Seventh weaknesses have been revealed. — The work generally is below programme. — No improvement is not shown in the management of this school I shall have to recommend Mr Martin to be removed to a much smaller one. —

Tynan	10	12 77/42848 H.	I have seen many better males than Mr Grenfell in small schools - I do not consider him an able teacher or manager - his manner and physique militate against him.
