An Extract from the Diary of John Dill Giving His Account of the Voyage of the Ship "Monarch of the Seas"

"My brother Joseph and I landed at Melbourne October 1867 and went from there by steamer to Sydney. The sailing vessel in which we came out called "Monarch of the Seas" was considered one of the largest and best clipper ships then built. The passage out was not without many incidents, some of which are now fixed in my memory.

"We got into what is called a white squall south of the Cape, lost our mainmast and mizzenmast. Sails torn to shreds and only the vessel was a good one, no doubt it would have been all up with us. We were becalmed for three weeks on the line and afterwards got too far south and got among the ice. I shall never forget that part of the voyage. The day previous an old sailor said to me "We are too far south and the Captain is out of his reckoning; if you stay up to night you will probably see ice." Like most boys I was fond of the sailors and spent a good deal of my time with them. Consequently after the conversation with my old sailor friend I decided on staying up and was well repaid for doing so, as about 12 o'clock at night we got into sight of sheet ice. The grating of the ice on copper of the vessel made a terrific noise, at least so it appeared to me at the time and no doubt was very alarming to the passengers of whom there were about three hundred. The deck soon presented an appearance not easily described and impossible to forget with so many passengers, men and women and children all in deshabille who had rushed on deck thinking we were about to be wrecked. Among the passengers were about eighty Welsh people who could not speak a word of English, and the screaming of women and children and din of noises is still vivid in my memory.

"The passengers were all ordered to their cabins and some of them had to be forced down and the hatches closed over them. One very big woman rushed up to the first mate, threw her arms round his neck and asked him to save her. The following morning we found we were pretty well surrounded with sheet ice and that there was a large iceberg about a mile from us. Our course was altered at once and we got clear of the ice in a few hours. Another incident of the voyage was that one of the sailors was put in irons for threatening the chief mate. My impression at the time and ever since was that the sailor had great provocation as the mate was a most overbearing man and none of the sailors or passengers liked him; he was however considered a good sailor.

An untoward accident befell one of the saloon passengers as we were crossing the line. He and another went up the mainmast and the chief mate gave two sailors the wink to make them pay their . . .

The rest of the voyage was without incident and we landed in Melbourne early in November. . . "
