"STATESMAN ADVENTURER OF THE PACIFIC."

Under this title, "Blackwood" has an article on Shirley Waldemar Baker, who was virtual ruler of Tonga in the seventies. The stir which led to his deposition and temporary expatriation is an almost forgotten story now. Born in Sydney, and started in life as a druggist's assistant, Baker became a Wesleyan missionary, and was sent to Tonga in 1862. Baker gradually worked his way into the counsels of King George, who had become a Wesleyan, until he was made Prime Minister. He quarrelled with the church he belonged to, and persuaded the King to set himself up as head of a new organisation, which, under Baker's direction, proceeded to persecute the old one mercilessly. At no time would Baker tolerate any authority but his own, and the strife between him and the Wesleyan Church became very bitter. Religious war ensued, and Baker made the country so hot for any but his own church associates to live in that the British High Commissioner had to intervene and deport him. The old church came out of the controversy victorious, and resumed its sway. The old King died, and a new ruler arose. Baker, after some years' stay in Auckland, found his way back to Tonga as an Anglican lay reader. Refused ordination by the Bishop of Honolulu, in whose diocese Tonga is situated, he started on his own account. "Though bitterly opposed by the Government, the Free Church, and the Wesleyans, his new church at once began to make headway, and at the first collection, conducted, of course, in the only way that Baker understood, £300 was realised. There were no churchwardens, and the minister was the only treasurer. All went well until it came to church-building. One of the congregation provided the site, but as fast as the material was brought to it, policemen, acting under the orders of the Cabinet, threw it out into the roadway. Thus was Baker made to know what persecution meant. Following close upon this incident came a legal difficulty. Baker had been solemnising marriages, which none but recognised ministers are legally qualified to do. One of these couples, anxious to be reassured as to the legality of its union, sought the opinion of the Vice-consul, and Baker, called upon for his proof of ordination, could produce nothing but his lay-reader's licence. Upon this Bishop Willis himself swooped down to take charge of the infant church, and the game, so far as the infant church, and the game, so far as Baker was concerned, was up. Much aged and broken, he spent the last months that remained to him in poverty and obscurity."

WILLIAMS.—On the 9th inst., at his residence, 14 Dawson-street south, of bronchitis, Robert Williams, teacher, native of Bristol, aged 66.

BALLARAT. Argus, 12.3.94

FRIDAY EVENING.

A very old resident of Ballarat, Mr. Robert Williams, late state school teacher, died today, succumbing to bronchitis after a long illness. The deceased arrived at Ballarat in 1852. After varying fortunes on the goldfields, he settled down to teaching, and he died at the residence he built in this city on a block he bought in the fifties. He leaves a widow and adult family of three sons and two daughters, the sons being Major R. E. Williams, well known as editor of the Ballarat Courier, and Captains T. M. and A. W. Williams, of the Victorian Defence Forces.

1089	State.		75	267.		Appd. N.T. from 1st Jany. 1875.
	Bushtitt	26 7	75	22117		Corr.
	Main	10 12	75	25658		His style of work is not adapted to a large school — he might get on very well in a small Country sch. He appears to be hot and down in mind and body — disinclined with his position and without spirit to make the most of it — is not very clean in person — is ragged in dress.
	Noyes	29 6	75	23573		The method in which the school was usually shewn is very weak organisation and inferior methods of instruction — on the 13th July the school was ¼ hour late owing to the irr attendance of the teacher — who and his wife entered and proceeded to make the fire and other preliminary arrangements — some twenty five minutes out of the two hours allotted for the N.T. were lost. The scholars themselves were assembled in time and awaited the opening of the school outside.
	Tyman	15 5	76	17922		To be encouraging — attentive — steady — should get a school of 50.
