Roll No	classification	Authority	Remarks
Gilchrist		6 8 73 24429	Not an intelligent teacher - talks too much - somewhat of a muddler - seems to have worked hard - no fault can be found with the progress made by his pupils considering all circumstances connected with the School -
Main		4 8 74 23934H	Works hard - appears somewhat defective in power of management - school room very crowded, he appeared under disadvantageous circumstances.
Craig		28 6 75 22214H.	Moderately skilful - diligent - deficient in power - ~~and~~ in judgment.
		75/29012.	Statement by J.H. Farrall that H.T. does not teach Drill. Informed that Class Drill forms part of the programme & should be regularly practiced
		75/29823.	S.H. Farrall complains of H.T.s conduct
		75/35778.	S.H. Farrall " H.T. refuses to supply requisites to his children
		75/37539.	H.T. infd. that he must supply copy books for the use of School children unprovided with them from whatever cause - & that on application a sufficient supply will be sent for the purpose.
		76/20668..	W. Patton - complaint of cruelty to children
		76/19921..	S.H. Farrell " " " "
		76/19922..	W. Patton " " " "
		76/26121..	H.T. censured for infringement of circular in striking the girl Patton & cautioned to be more judicious in the exercise of corporal punishment upon boys generally -
		29 9. 76/35949. H.2.	Fined £3. for inaccuracy in marking rolls.
"		29 9 76/35949 H2.	Experienced - not a wise teacher - indulges in foolish remarks to the children - Keeps rather poor order.
M.O. 4400.		16 3. 77/9123.	Severely censured for using indelicate language to scholars & cautioned that a repetition of conduct of the kind will inevitably lead to his severance from the department - × × × × ×. The charge is 18 months old or Mr. Wilson would at once have been removed to another district -
Craig		18 11 75/37496H.	Diligent - only moderately energetic - skilful enough in the mere mechanics of school management - seems deficient in good sense.
		77/29062. 32071.	To be transf. from Elmore - to Bethanga No. 1883.
M.O. 5714.		77/33236.	To remain at Elmore.

[illegible] recovery of £500 [illegible] peared for the plaintiff; Mr Martley a[illegible] C. A. Smyth for the defendant.

Mr Purves opened the case, and called,—

Margaret Wilson, who stated that she had been a teacher for many years, and was a duly qualified instructress. In November, 1869, she was appointed to a school at Burke's Flat, and remained there until February, 1870, when the assault complained of took place. The emoluments of the school amounted to about L130, of which L80 was paid by the board, and she had to get the abstract signed by defendant before she could get her money. The January and February returns were due, and she handed the abstract to defendant to sign, and he kept it a day or two. Defendant said that if she did not resign he would ruin her as a teacher. She asked why, but he would not tell her. He said he wanted to see the book, and she took them to his house, but he was not in. On the 13th the defendant asked again for the books. She asked if the morning would not do, as they were left at the school. He again told her to resign, or he would make her; he said something about being authorised by the committee. She went for the books, and the defendant ran after her, caught her by the shoulder, and knocked her down and tried to wrench the books from her. After lifting her up and dashing her to the ground several times, she became faint, and he got away the books; she screamed, and the school children came. she was much excited, and her mouth was bleeding. She went subsequently to the defendant to get her papers, which were in the books, and he was reading them. He said there was nothing in them, and that she had laid down as nicely as anybody he ever saw. She was attended for the injuries she had received by Dr Crosland; he attended her for a fortnight, and she paid him £10 10s. The school was subsequently locked out, and she got a letter from the board suspending her.

Cross-examined by Mr Martley.—She was not dismissed for falsifying the returns. She had a letter from the board confirming her dismissal for falsifying the returns. The book was the record of the school for eighteen months. Her dismissal had been sanctioned, but she did not consider herself dismissed. Subsequently she was engaged by the Industrial school committee, but she did not communicate to them the reasons why she left the Burke's Flat School. There were two children attending the school, named Ada and Alice Pritchard, but she never marked them as present when they were absent. She always marked them correctly, and never asked Mrs Pritchard to say the children were present at school when they were not, or she should be ruined; she had no occasion to do anything of the sort.

[illegible] Martley read a letter from the Board to Mr Wilson, to the effect that charges had been made against her of falsifying the return; that, on one occasion, Mr Morley, the correspondent of the school, was present at roll call, and found that thirty-six children were present; subsequently, examining the roll, he found thirty-seven marked.

Mr Morley was in the habit of seeing the records at the school. Mr Morley never told her that. She had put down a child too much. She never wrote to the Board, saying that Morley had complained to her that there were thirty-[illegible] children present, and thirty-seven had been returned on the occasion referred to. Morley never told her anything about it.

George Crosland deposed that he was a duly qualified medical practitioner, and in February last he was called on to attend the plintiff, and found that she had received three abrasions on the face, and discolourations on the shoulder, and lacerations on the lip. She was also suffering from intense nervous excitement, caused by a loss of sleep. A fall would have caused the abrasions on the face. The marks on the neck and shoulder might have been caused by seisure by the hand. His fee was £10 10s, for which he got a cheque, which was duly honoured, and was a bona fide payment.

Alexander Gallagher, a miner, residing at Burke's Flat, deposed that on the 13th of February, at a few minutes after six, he saw Mr Morley leaving Mrs Wilson's house. Mrs Wilson went to the school. Mr Morley then went towards the school, and when Mrs Wilson came out the defendant ran towards her, and threw her down. She screamed, and Mr Morley lifted her up three or four times. When he got what he wanted he ran off. Mrs Wilson attempted to follow him, but turned off again. The scuffle lasted three or four minutes. He had known Mrs Wilson for about eighteen months, and one of his children had attended the school with satisfactory results. He saw her after the assault, and she appeared very much excited, and had spots of blood on her face.

John Gerroni gave corroborative evidence.

Margaret Gilmore deposed to a conversation which took place between Mr Morley and Mrs Wilson, when Mr Morley came for the books. She asked him whether another time would do, and he said, "Wont you take my advice," and said that if she did not he would ruin her as a school teacher. She went for the books and Mr Morley left, and subsequently she heard screams, and witnessed part of the assault. Mrs Wilson seemed as if she was out of her mind.

The defence was a denial of the assault, and that only just sufficient force was used as was necessary for the recovery of property which the defendant was entitled to possess for the performance of his duties as correspondent of the school.

Mr Martley pointed out the salient points of the case, and submitted that the defendant had merely acted in the discharge of his duties. He called,—

John Morley, who deposed that he was the correspondent of the Burke's Flat Common School. In that capacity it was part of his duties to certify the returns made by the [illegible] to the board. Month after month he signed Mrs Wilson's return. In January last he thought she was falsifying the [illegible]. In consequence of what he heard witness counted the children himself on one occasion, and found 37 entered when only 36 were present according to his account, but he was wrong on that occasion. On others he found that more children were entered than were present. He asked her for the books on the last occasion of her wanting her return signed, and she declined to give them. She made some excuse, and he said he would not sign unless he got the books. He advised Mrs Wilson to resign; because things were not going on as they showed she was not giving satisfaction to the committee or the parents, and was neglecting her duties. She said she would not resign. He asked her again if she was going to take his advice. He said he must have the books there, because in the morning his examination would interfere with the working of the school. On the day of the alleged assault he met her half-way between the school and her house, carrying the books. He ran after her, his suspicion being aroused, and asked her for the books. She declined to give them up. He pointed to the school and told her to take them back to their proper place. A rule of the board was, that the roll and account books were to be kept in the school. She refused to do this. He then tried to take hold of them, and in the scuffle she went down; he did not knock her down. When she was down he took hold of the books. In stooping down some papers fell out of his pocket, which she took. He got them away from her, and then got the books from her and walked away with them. He was on good terms with Mrs Wilson up to January, though she had been neglecting her duties—getting worse and worse. To Mr Purves: He did not say he would ruin Mrs Wilson; he said he should not like to do so. He gave her the advice, because he thought it would be the best thing for her, and not because she had been gossiping about him. He did not go openly to her and tell her that he was going to count heads. He was wrong on one occasion when engaged in this task, and might have been wrong on others. At the time of the assault, he took hold of her about the waist; he did not take hold of her by the neck. A struggle ensued, and she went down. He pulled away at the books, and pulled her up and down. He persisted in the struggle because he was determined to have them if he could get them.

Alexander Ingleton, a miner, and a member of the Common School committee, said: On the 13th of February, he was on Mr Gallagher's verandah, when the plaintiff came up and said, "Do you know what the little wretch has been saying." He said that he did not, and she said that he wanted the books, and she would take care that he did not get them. He saw the assault, which he described in much the same way as the defendant.

Amelia Barnett gave evidence to the effect that on the 13th February, she was at Mrs Wilson's, when Morley came for the books. Mrs Wilson said he could not have them. She was still at Mrs Wilson's house; when she came back after the assault she was crying, and had her dress up to her face.

Mr Martley addressed the jury for the defence in an able speech, after which Mr Purves replied.

His Honor summed up, pointing out that the defendant really was not aggrieved by Mrs Wilson's not getting the books for him, for the plaintiff was delaying the payment of her own salary. He held, too, that the time he went for them, six o'clock, was a very improper time for him to go to her private house to ask for the books, and the subsequent proceedings of the defendant were not calculated to inspire respect for his office. Besides, there was a proper method by which he could have obtained possession of the books. The issue he put to the jury was this, was there more than sufficient violence used to enable him to recover the books.

The jury, after a short retirement, returned a verdict for the plaintiff, damages L50.

		21 3 89/10883 H.	Jackson. Teaches fairly well. Several weak points in organization.
		28 3 90/13589 H.	— " — Is not without some teaching ability, but has a jog trot pace which it seems difficult to get him out of.
		18 7 90/34895 H.2.	" — Can teach on very fair methods. His efforts are partially frustrated by weakness in discipline and organization.
		9 2 91/7218 H	Jackson: I think he is making an effort to improve. Discipline and tone fair.
	IV. 3. 4	30 6 91 Tr Roll
		8 3 92 10361 H	Stalkyard: Shows but moderate skill in managing the school. Is heavy & slow in his teaching. Lacks life & energy 46
		26 7 92 32534 H.2	— " — The school has passed a good exam.n on the whole but the classes taught by the H.T. did but fairly. Is weak as a disciplinarian 52
		7 3 93 7628 H	Stalkyard: Very weak in general management and discipline. Does very little work himself. His instruction is, to a large extent individual 54
		9 5 93 29373 H	Stalkyard: Is very easy going. School has passed only a fair exam.n May be reckoned a fair teacher 55
	IV. 3. 3	30 6 94 Tr. Roll
		13 8 94 27159 H.	McOrran: Has since resuming duty put a good deal of energy into his teaching: supervision is closer: improvement noticeable throughout the school: although results are only fair. Several weaknesses still exist in instruction 66 v. fair.
		10 9 94 31600 H.	Livingstone Is not without ability, but does not exert himself sufficiently either in teaching or supervising 69 v. fair.
		20 3 94 9055 H	Campbell A very fair teacher 61.
		4 3 95 16565 C	Warn him that if another report of a similar character (94/31600 H.) be received, it will probably be found necessary to resort to severe measures.
		15 3 95 8359 H	McOrran Is, I believe, capable of doing very fair work, but there is a want of system & thoroughness in his teaching, & his supervision is not of a constant & sufficiently comprehensive character. Does not exert himself sufficiently. Seems capable of controlling school but does not secure diligent & constant work from pupils & frequently allows children to chatter & lounge at desks almost unchecked. 62 v. fair.
		12 2 96 4134 H	McOrran Now doing very fair work: management is more effective & teaching is more thorough 68
		20 8 96 26641 H	McOrran Continues to manifest much more interest in his work than formerly. Teaching is of a very fairly effective character 71 good.
		15 3 97 7904 H	McOrran Doing work of a very fair character. Supervision of a fair character & sustained with fair constancy 66+
	IV. 3, 5	30 6 97 Tr. Roll
		8 9 97 25944 H	McOrran Has his school in a generally good state of efficiency: is now doing better work than formerly 72 good.
